Defense, in All-Day Summing Up, Denies Evidence Shows Conspiracy to Force Contractors Into "Code"

Didn't Balk Competition

Armstrong Is Called "Liar Who Prostituted His Soul

to Escape Indictment" Contrary to expectations, counsel for John T. Hettrick and three co-defendants on trial before Supreme Court Justice McAvoy for alleged conspiracy to force plumbing contractors into Hettrick's "code of practice" scheme of bidding, took all day yesterday to sum up their defense. Henry L. Stimson, chief counsel for the prosecution, will sum up this morning, when the case will go to the jury.

Calls Witness "Yellow"

Nathaniel Cohen, counsel for Doran, characterized James Armstyong, one of the witnesses, as "yellow" and "a liar who prostituted his soul to escape indictment" William Y. Jack, another witness, he called "Don't remember Jack," adding that he also had testified falsely to obtain immunity.

William J. Fallon, counsel for Chapman, said his client and Doran "were the good Samaritans in the plumbing business and had helped many contractors settle strikes," Hettrick had been accused of every crime under the tractors settle strikes." Hettrick had been accused of every crime under the Donnelly anti-trust law, he declared, "because of a poor selection of English," referring to the words "allotment" and "entitled" found among Hettrick's records. When Fallon requested the jury to consider what the wives and the children of the defendants attending school would think if the ants attending school would think if the men were sent to jail, Justice McAvoy interrupted, "We do not allow that in this court. We do not take up what this court. We do not take up what the children in the schools may say."

Martin Conboy, counsel for Smith, clashed with the court when he de-manded to know why some of the other plumbers had not been indicted with Hettrick Kenneth Spence, associate Hettrick. Kenneth Spence, associate counsel for the prosecution, objected, and when he was sustained by the court Conboy came back with, "I take exception to the court's remarks." Justice MaAvoy retorted, "I reiterate it and you may reiterate your exception."

Denies Agreement Was Illegal

Conboy admitted the existence of a Conboy admitted the existence of an agreement between the Plumbers' Union, Local 403, and the Master Plumbers' Association, but denied there was anything illegal about it. He supported his claim by reading from the statutes. Far from preventing competition, he said, there was no real competition before the creation of Hettrick's code.

Robert H. Elder, counsel for Hettrick, insisted that all the witnesses.
